Queen Mim of Korea was greatly disliked by her subjects. The husband, who was entirely under her influence, did exactly what she wished, and never prevented her from getting money from the people by any possible means. She sold every office in the government to the highest bidder and compelled their purchase When people preferred not to buy an office because the price was higher than they could pay, the offending person was put in prison and his money taken from him. She had a force of private detectives scattered through the country, and any one complaining of the queen or disapproving of her methods was imprisoned without family or friends being notified. She lived in constant terror of assassination, and took endless precautions to prevent it. She sat up all night in one of her several bedrooms and no one but her intimates

Under one bedroom there was a trapdoor, with steps leading to a room below, where she always kept on gnard 40 couriers and a vehicle, in case she withed to escape from the palace at a moment's no ice Queen Mun surrounded herself with fortune tellers and made continual sacrifices to gods of all kinds. The sincerity of her motives is doubtful, when it is known that she installed a prophetess and made the king, Th Rhee, believe that he must obey her, having first given orders as to what the prophesy should be -Philadelphia

An Indignant Old Lady.

The car stopped, and on climbed an elaborately dressed lady, followed by a norse girl bearing a small boy in her The lady looked entirely too young to be the boy's mother and was dressed in style becoming rather a young girl In addition she paid no attention whatever to the infant and nurse, who took a seat behind her, and the spectators on the car began to think that they had been deceived in imagining that there was any relation between Presently she raised her daintily gloved hand and signaled the conductor to stop Then she stepped gracefully off and made her way to the curb Look ing back indifferently, she said

'Jane, bring the boy " The boy evidently did not want to come He clung to the seat in spite of the nurse, whereat the fin de siecle mother called

"Boy-boy-come along!" And the old lady on the back seat sniffed indignantly and said:

The Carson News, which from the first discovery of the theft in the mint until the United States Court silenced it, acted as if it was retained by those who were suspected of being implicated in the steal, now says in an article relating to the unusual number of standard dollars in the State treasury a year

"For nearly a week the mint author-ities in Carson have been investigating this matter and they completed last evening.

"The records were examined to see what the coinage of 1893 should have been. The amount on hand was counted as was the amount paid out by the mint and then the $80,000 that was in the State treasury was added to it, and it made just the correct total.

If the News is correct it shows that the 80,000 silver dollars in the State and what was paid out by the mint, to House bill. make the amount coined in 1893. Surely the News does not wish to convey the idea that the dollars in the guez, Charge d'Affairs of the Argentine State treasury were not paid out by the mint, yet that is the only inference that can be drawn from its statement

The News further says that "so far as the silver in the State treasury is concerned, that is immaterial." While the News may possibly think so there are many taxpayers in the countries, he asks whether it could not State who think otherwise. What a Cherry Creek Man Says About

CHERRY CREEK, December 27, 1895. EDITOR JOURNAL-I saw an article rom the Carson News in which the editor says that silver and the mining; industry is not Nevada' chief source

Now, as regards this county it is silver mining that we all depend upon to make anything above a living. Before silver was knocked out all products from the soil were 50 per cent higher than now. There are some thirty min- Mr. and Mrs. L. D. THE SHREWD GRAY SQUIRREL.

Attending Strictly to Business, He Gets the Better of a Wily Hunter. "Of course," said a hunter, "everybody knows that when a man with a gun comes along, the gray squirrel goes aroan I on the other side of the tree; he doesn't get killed if he can help it, and he can help himself pretty well. I remember once coming across a gray squirrel up a big oak; he was out on a branch about 40 feet from the ground. He saw me as quick as I did himquicker, I guess-and when I was ready to fire, he was around on the other side of the branch. This branch was very small, only a mighty little bigger than the squirrel, but he hugged it so close and he was in such perfect line with me that you couldn't see anything of him at all except a little bit of the tip of his tail that was blown out by a strong wind. I blazed away at him and Mrs. C. H. Lewis, house and lot in never touched him. Then I went aroun on the other side of the tree, thinking that possibly I could get a shot at him from there, but as I went one way he went the other, and by the time I had got over on the other side he was on the side I had come from, and in just as perfect line with me as he was at RENO, NEVADA. first, and just as safe. I don't suppose it would have made any differ- | J ence to him if I'd opened a clothing store there; he knew the man with the gun, and it was the gun that he was looking out for.

"Well, we dodged around that tree for quite a spell longer. There wasn't any other tree near by that the squirrel coald go to, and he knew his only safety lay in sticking to the one he was in, and the way he did stick to it and keep around always on the other side of that branch was something wonderful. I fired five or six shots at him altogether and filled the branch under him half full of shot, but never touched him, and when I thought I had wasted time and ammunition enough, I left him.
